High Reliability Organizations have a social system with a culture sensitive to safety that makes it possible for employees to cope with uncertain and time-dependent threats. The ninth annual Perioperative Nursing Conference will address ways that healthcare personnel and teams working in perioperative surgical departments can develop systems to address and manage adverse issues to prevent or mitigate accidents or errors.

Objectives

- Nurses in perioperative setting will recognize their critical role in the successful implementation of ERAS.
- Participants will begin to use self-reflection as a part of developing a safety culture in the perioperative setting that reflects high reliability organizations.
- Participants will understand how Q-Ball is used in the management of pain post-operatively.

Learning outcome

By the end of this conference, attendees will acquire knowledge, skills, and tools to have a sustained and emerging impact on patient outcomes found in high reliability organizations.
